

UNC Law School Death Penalty Project presents a panel discussion:

JUSTICE DELAYED

WRONGFUL CONVICTIONS IN ROBESON COUNTY

Henry McCollum and his brother Leon Brown have spent thirty years, the majority of their lives, in prison for a brutal rape and murder of a young girl that they did not commit. This summer they were released thanks to DNA evidence from the crime scene and the hard work of their attorneys and of the North Carolina Innocence Inquiry Commission. Please join us for a panel discussion featuring a few of the people who shaped this story and continue to work in a justice system dealing with the lessons and consequences of justice delayed far too long.

OUR PANELISTS

Vernetta Alston was Henry McCollum's post-conviction attorney

Adam Stein was Leon Brown's trial attorney

Johnson Britt is the current Robeson County District Attorney
